

David Noble, Ph.D.

Director at University of Connecticut

Storrs, CT, US

Professor Noble focuses on digital entrepreneurship, higher education innovation, and futurist development

Biography

David Noble is a leader in higher education innovation, and as the inaugural Director of The Werth Institute at UConn, he is developing a modern university-wide approach to entrepreneurship and innovation curriculum. Firmly routed in the digital revolution, David has written about the impact of data analytics on corporate strategy, governance, and leadership. Current interests include the application of emerging technologies to real world change, including quantum computing, digital currency, artificial intelligence, and new materials. David has specific industry expertise across a number of domains, including fintech, mobility 2.0, the future of work, fashion, and the firearms industry. Having founded a privacy technology firm, GunClear.io, that is experimenting with zero knowledge proofs, he is often looking at the problems of digitization from a different angle.
