Biography

Jason von Meding is an expert in how disaster affects people. Since 2005 he has questioned how the government, universities and corporations communicate with the public about disasters and risk. His research focuses on the injustices and inequalities that are foundational to our social system, and how disasters unveil society and show us what needs to change. At its core, his intellectual pursuits are interrogating what a sustainable social/political/economic future would look like and demonstrating that we are not on such a pathway.
