

Kimberly Young

Director, Masters in Strategic Leadership and Professor of Management at St. Bonaventure University

Jamestown, New York Area, , US

Founder and Director at Center for Internet Addiction Recovery

Biography

Since her groundbreaking book Caught in the Net in 1998, psychologist Kimberly Young was the first to identify Internet addiction and its impact on our children, families, and our culture. In 1995, Dr. Young launched the first study on Internet addiction and her pioneering work has led to the emergence of new research and treatment programs to address this new and rapidly evolving field. Dr. Young is a professor at St. Bonaventure University and founder and director of the Center for Internet Addiction Recovery in Bradford, Pa. She founded the first inpatient clinic for Internet addiction recovery in the United States at the Bradford Regional Medical Center and her work has been featured in The New York Times, Newsweek, Time, USAToday, CNN, Fox News, Good Morning America, MSNBC News, and The Today Show. She travels across the country speaking on the impact of smartphones and devices on our personal and family lives. She helps us identify warning signs of Internet addiction and has developed strategies for how we can build "Screen Smart" schools for children and introduces her new 3-6-9-12 Parenting Guidelines for managing tech use at home. Dr. Young has received the Psychology in the Media Award from the Pennsylvania Psychological Association and the Alumni Ambassador Award for Outstanding Achievement from Indiana University at Pennsylvania. She also serves on the advisory board for The Internet Group in Toronto and the Safeguard Children against Internet Addiction Ministry in Japan.
